NEW QUESTION: 1

An employee has resigned. During the exit interview, the employee tells HR that the reason for the resignation is that for the last 3 months the supervisor has been hostile, refused to provide instructions on work assignments, given the employee all the most unpleasant tasks in the department, and verbally reprimanded the employee in front of co-workers and customers. The employee may have a cause of legal action based on which of the following?

- A. The employer's duty of good faith and fair dealing
- B. Promissory estoppel
- C. Constructive discharge
- D. Fraudulent misrepresentation

Answer: C

Explanation:

Answer option C is correct. Constructive discharge occurs when the employer forces an employee to resign by creating a work environment that is so unpleasant a reasonable person would resign. The duty of good faith and fair dealing (B) applies to contracts, requiring both parties to act in a fair and honest manner with each other to ensure that benefits of the contract are realized. Promissory estoppel (D) occurs when an employer entices an employee to take an action by promising a reward but then does not follow through on the reward. Fraudulent misrepresentation (A) occurs when an employer makes untrue promises or claims to a candidate. Chapter: Employee and Labor Relations Objective: Review Questions
