NEW QUESTION: 1

A customer has two separate lines of business and each has its own unique resources that are controlled independently. The customer wants to provide a single user interface at the enterprise level that, at least from the user's perspective, unifies the separate lines of business and presents a single consistent view. What is the most suitable architectural arrangement for such a federated deployment?

- A. The enterprise implements full client and service stacks while each LoB deploys a partial service. sufficient to expose uniform interface elements.
- B. The client tier assimilates the data from the service stack of each line of business.
- C. The enterprise implements full client stack and part of the service stack while each LoB deploys the remaining part of the service tier in order to expose uniform interface elements.

D. The client tier assimilates the data from the resource stack of each line of business.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Each line of business has its own resources that are unique to the line of business and are controlled by that line of business. The enterprise wants to provide a single user interface that, at least from the user's perspective, unifies the separate lines of business. In this example, the enterprise wide user interface deployment is a full featured user interaction architecture (i.e. it contains all of the capabilities defined in the Logical View). Each line of business deploys limited functionality since the only functionality required is the functionality to create interface elements exposing the resources of that line of business. The enterprise wide user interface then uses the interface elements provided by the lines of business to create a unified user experience.

The interface elements provided by the lines of business are Remote Providers to the enterprise user interface. This deployment allows the lines of business to maintain control of their respective resources since the only access to the resources is via the interface elements that they create.
