NEW QUESTION: 1

Today's spot value date is Friday 27th February. What is normally the 1-month maturity date? Assume no bank holidays.

- A. 31st March
- B. 29th March
- C. 30th March
- D. 28th March

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2

Your customer has an existing HP StoreServ 7400 with four controllers. The array has only SSD drives installed. What should you consider when sizing a solution which includes Adaptive Optimization?

- A. Ensure that 3% of the capacity and 30% of the performance can be delivered by the SAS disks.
- B. Size the nearline tier for 30% of the performance requirement.
- C. Add SSDs or nearline disks to a single node pair.
- D. Include SAS 10/15K disks in the configuration.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Note:

*SAS stands for Serial Attached SCSI. Basically, a SAS drive utilizes the same form factor as a SATA drive but has several high performance advantages. First of all, there's the platter speed. While typical SATA drives operate at 7200RPM, a SAS drive operates at 10K or 15K. Although the platter speed is double that of SATA, the MTBF (Mean Time Before Failure) remains at the industry standard of 1.2 million hours.

*Make sure to define tier 0 to be on a higher performance level than tier 1, which in turn should be higher performance than tier 2. For example, you may choose RAID 1 with SSDs for tier 0, RAID 5 with FC drives for tier 1 and RAID 6 with NL or SATA drives for tier 2.

*Best practices encourage you to begin your Adaptive Optimization configurations with your application CPG starting with tier 1. For example, tier 1 could be CPG using your FC or SAS physical disks. This allows you to add both higher and lower tier capabilities at a later date. If you don't have higher or lower tier, you can add either or both at a later date by using a new CPG, such as tier 0 using SSDs or tier 2 using NL. Or, you could have CPG tiers with RAID 1 or RAID 5 and RAID 6. The main point is that you should begin with middle CPG tier 1 when configuring Adaptive Optimization with your application.

*Example: HP 3PAR Adaptive Optimization moved ~33 percent of the IOPS workload to the SSD drives even though that involved moving only 1 percent of the space. Performance improved in two ways: the 33 percent of the IOPS that were serviced by SSD drives got very good latencies (~2 ms), and the latencies for the NL drives also improved (from ~40 ms to ~15 ms). Moreover, the investment in the 16 SSD drives permitted them to add even more NL drives in the future, because the SSD drives have both space and performance headroom remaining.

NEW QUESTION: 3

Which of the following is a valid configuration for a 3PAR CPG tier 1?

- A. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 1
- B. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 5
- C. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 6
- D. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 10

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 4

VLAN

Which of the following is a valid configuration for a 3PAR CPG tier 1?

- A. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 1
- B. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 5
- C. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 6
- D. 16 SSD drives, 16 NL drives, RAID 10

Answer: A
