NEW QUESTION: 1

- A. Option C
- B. Option A
- C. Option D
- D. Option B

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

As your infrastructure grows, common patterns can emerge in which you declare the same components in each of your templates. You can separate out these common components and create dedicated templates for them.

That way, you can mix and match different templates but use nested stacks to create a single, unified stack. Nested stacks are stacks that create other stacks. To create nested stacks, use the `AWS::CloudFormation::StackResource` in your template to reference other templates.

For more information on nested stacks, please visit the below URL:

The query is, how you can automate a stack over the period of time, when changes are required, without recreating the stack. The function of Nested Stacks are to reuse Common Template Patterns.

For example, assume that you have a load balancer configuration that you use for most of your stacks. Instead of copying and pasting the same configurations into your templates, you can create a dedicated template for the load balancer. Then, you just use the resource to reference that template from within other templates.

Yet another example is if you have a launch configuration with certain specific configuration and you need to change the instance size only in the production environment and to leave it as it is in the development environment.

AWS also recommends that updates to nested stacks are run from the parent stack.

When you apply template changes to update a top-level stack, AWS CloudFormation updates the top-level stack and initiates an update to its nested stacks. AWS CloudFormation updates the resources of modified nested stacks, but does not update the resources of unmodified nested stacks.
